

Review of “Professor W’s Earth Science Circus” by the Grand Falloons at East Broadway

Last month our school had viewed “Professor W’s Earth Science Circus” by the Grand Falloons present their show for all of our K-5 students. This show was very well received by students of all ages. The students learned how important it is to take care of their environment and the world we live in. Everyone learned about how important recycling is and they learned that they should not litter. The students learned how littering affects the community in which they live, as well as the air we breathe and the water that surrounds us.

The two men who presented this show did a terrific job. One man played the role of the professor and kept the show moving. The other gentleman played the role of his assistant and he kept the students interested with his own silly behavior and responses. The silliness was perfect for this age group and the children remembered the important information they learned along with the silliness associated with it. I am the mother of triplet boys in the third grade at East Broadway, and my three boys kept repeating many of the lines used in the show and constantly kept saying “let’s go to the Commonsensinator” (which is where the professor and assistant went for answers to questions posed during the show).

It is apparent that both performers truly believed in the message they delivered to the students. This was expressed through their actions and passion for the material that was evidenced on stage. I would highly recommend this program to other school who are interested in having their student body learn about the importance of protecting the environment.

Cheryl Clifford
May 18, 2006